

SharpShark.io

Cookie agreement

During each visit to the Company's website, some data related to the Client's behavior on the Company's website, such as location, menu choices and similar, is passively collected and stored using special cookies.

The Company's websites use cookies, both proprietary and third party cookies, such as Google Analytics, as a means of collecting data about a particular view of pages and sections of the Company's website by the Client.

A cookie is a small text file sent by the Client's browser, through which the Client visited the Company's website. It helps the Company's automated web site tools to remember information about the visit, including the preferred language and other settings provided by the Client. Without personalized information, you can access the Company's website without cookies. Restrictions related to the necessary use of cookies may apply to areas of the Company's website limited by the Client's login-password binding that require authorization on the Company's website.